

Roberts in one way or another. If its "special correspondent" gets lost and wanders away from Mr. Roberts' meetings a hundred miles or so, it makes no difference to the organ—it purposes to work off a "frost" story and give its readers the "news" anyhow.The facts and figures presented by our Republican contemporary are like Dumas' novels in more respects than one—they are imaginative and thrilling, but generally require a sequel.

CHARACTERISTIC FRAILTIES.

Tradition has it that southern Republicans are death on chickens. Their Utah brethren are bent with the same weakness, it seems.And, while there may be some excuse for relieving an owner of his fowls, if the foregoing party is really hungry and fond of poultry, there is no excuse for the Republican party of Utah breaking into the chicken coop of Democracy for the purpose of purloining its typical and time-honored rooster.Republicans do not like that chan-celored whose clarion notes have proclaimed victories for Democracy on a hundred thousand hard-fought fields of battle. But they want him as a trophy of this campaign, having concluded, no doubt, that they will get no other.It is virtually an admission on the part of Republicans that they have given up trying to beat any one else on the Democratic ticket and are concentrating their efforts on the rooster.It may look like small business to many, but it is Republican size.

GRATIFYING A GRUDGE.

Renewing its personal attack on Francis Armstrong, county commissioner, the Tribune reiterates its dishonored statement that the county commissioners had something to do with the county assessment.B. B. Quinn is assessor, and, with efficient deputies, has made a fair valuation of property on a cash basis as required by the law. Neither Mr. Armstrong nor any other commissioner had anything to do with that assessment, and the Tribune knows it.There are some facts of which the Republican organ is aware but which it fails to print. It knows that its publishing plant and its owner's personal property together were reduced over 40 per cent from the assessment of 1897. This was done, too, in the face of the owner's admission that the plant cost twice as much as it was assessed for. Nobody has suggested in the Tribune that Mr. Armstrong is responsible for this extraordinary reduction.As with nearly all the other assessments, the owner's statement of actual cash value was accepted.Was that reduction dishonest? And if it was, dare the Tribune suggest that any Democratic official is responsible for it?The records show—and the Tribune knows it—that the only action taken by the commissioners in connection with the city railway assessment was as a board of equalization. In this capacity they increased the assessor's valuation by some $24,000, and this was only done after hearing disinterested testimony as to the value of the property.Mr. Armstrong, very properly, did not sit as a member of the board of equalization, which his personal interests were involved.

THE CHANGE NEEDED.

I. N. Fisher promises to become famous as the only original doodle auditor this county ever had. It took an expert corps to interpret the vagaries of his books when he was in office, and even then there remained more mystery than the wonderful Wisconsin doodle book ever did.The report of the experts would have convicted any intelligent man that Fisher was never more than an auditor, but it failed to reach Fisher. He still suffers from the delusion that he knows something about county affairs. Just how far he has missed his real calling may be imagined from the apology for him printed in the same column with his own figures by the Tribune.Regarding the discrepancies pointed out above, says the joke editor of that paper, "we believe the figures here sible, but it is extremely difficult to get them with exactness. Thus, the rate applied to the valuation does not work
